

Originally from Philadelphia, PA., Christine Hill attended Colorado State University and earned a Bachelor's degree in anthropology. Most recently, she obtained a graduate certificate in Natural Resources from Virginia Tech.

Hill started her USDA Forest Service career in the Rocky Mountain Region, then headed west to California where she has worked on 3 forests, predominantly in northern California as district archaeologist, lands and recreation staff officer, and heritage program manager.

Over the last couple of years, Christine has worked as both deputy district ranger and ranger and now is the acting district ranger on Mark Twain National Forest's Potosi Ranger District.

"I appreciate the opportunity to be working in Missouri," Hill said. "Thanks for welcoming me to the Mark Twain."
